Many granite cutters, railroad emloyes and other people had just cause giving vent to their indignation and wrath near the Central Vermont railroad crossing on Granite street during the noon hour yesterday. Some man, whose name is unknown, driving a pair of horses attached to a sled, drove along Granite street with a black and amount to anything. He takes too white cow, which he had just pur-chased at some auction sale, hitched to pleasure. But now, do you know been secured by a noose slipped around fellow. He takes lots of recreation to its nec, and another around its nose. keep himself in good fettle. That is Being reluctant to follow her new owner, the animal had been dragged by the superior strength of the horses to such an extent that by the time the railroad crossing was reached both nooses had tightened. Too exhausted to go any further it had to be dragged across the tracks in order to avoid an approaching train. About that time the bovine was unable to stand on its feet and fell to the ground. A few men in the close vicinity made haste to release the cow, which was bleeding at the nose and had its breath almost shut off by the rope around its neck. It was evident from conversation with the man in the sled that he was quite ignorant of the physical condition of the cow, and quite as ignorant of the proper treatment that should be accorded a dumb animal. The indigna-tion and anger expressed by many of the passersby was certainly justified.

COULD READ OWN WRITING.

So Dr. Jones Filled the Prescriptions When Druggist Died.

Old Dr. Jones, who once practiced medicine in a New Jersey town, was known everywhere as a notoriously bad speller. He slipped up on the simplest words, and people wondered how he managed to write prescriptions, espe-cially in medical Latin, so that they ould be read and understood. Though the "doc," as he was called, could not spell, he was, nevertheless, accounted a good physician and his patients swore by him. He sent his prescriptions regularly to a certain druggist in the town because this man was the only iruggist who could read them. How the druggist succeeded in doing so it was a mystery to everyone. a mystery to everyone.

Everything went well for a long time, then one day the druggist was taken ill and died. His funeral was largely attended and Dr. Jones was one of the principal mourners. What will become of the "doe" now! Who will be get to read his prescriptions? were questions on everyone's lips. It was cetty generally agreed that the future looked black for the physician, but this man who spelled rheumatism "rumawas not to be discouraged. The day after the obsequies of the druggist day after the obsequies of the druggist the following announcement, printed in longhand, appeared in the window of the pharmacy: "The Jones has bought this drug store. He will continue the bleness and fill prescripshons hisself."

Junior-Senior High School Notes.

There was a box social given Nov 23 in the assembly hall by the members of the fifth year. A very interest ing program was given by members of the high school, including a short farce "A Tragedy in Three Acts." A vocal solo by Gertrude Jeffords and a piano solo by Annie Ross were appreciated. There was a large attendance, considering the weather, which was very bad; nevertheless many pretty boxes were auctioned off. About 24 dollars were realized.

An Outdoor club is being formed in the high school. It is expected that many good times will result. The officers elected are as follows: President, Arthur Stone; vice-president, Dorothy Walsh; secretary and treasurer, Gertrude Whitney.
